HONGKONG, DECEMBER 2ND, 1907.

MARINE insurance might be simplified. The case referred to in another column, giving a Japanese judgment bearing on the "perils of the seas," may not particularly interest other than those who do shipping business in Japanese ports; but it serves to call attention to the knotty legal problems buried in even the simplest contract with underwriters. The lay mind naturally wonders why a contract of marine insurance cannot be drawn up in such form as to prevent these expensive "sue and labour" wrangles. In consideration of a premium of so much, we the assured undertake to pay the assured so much, if the goods catalogued in the margin are not delivered to the satisfaction of the assured or of an umpire. Something short and easy like that is the natural lay solution of a problem that has puzzled lawyers, judges, and business men for hundred of years, for marine insurance is perhaps the most ancient of all. It has been traced back certainly to the thirteenth century, and is believed to date earlier even than that. The lay mind, as usual when it meddles with law, is apt to overlook many things, particularly that there are two parties to the transaction, both of whose interests need to be guarded. Looking only at the wording, "perils of the seas," the lay mind is apt to feel contemptuous of the judicial mind which can feel doubts as to what is covered by such a phrase. Taking a wellknown common form of a marine insurance policy he reads that the risk taken by the underwriters includes the adventures and perils of the seas, "and of all other perils, losses, and misfortunes that have or shall come to the hurt, detriment, or damage of the said goods and merchandise." What can it matter after that, the lay mind argues, whether the cargo was properly stowed or not? Surely the underwriters ought to pay up on such a comprehensive clause, obviously intended to cover almost everything that could happen? That is just where the lay mind falls short of the glory of the professional. In the rules quoted in Mr. LAWRENCE DUCKWORTH'S "Epitome of the Law affecting Marine Insurance" (London: EPPINGHAM WILSON 1907) the term "perils of the seas" is defined as referring only to fortuitous accidents or casualties of the sea. It does not include even the ordinary action of the wind and waves. The peril has to be something unexpected. But that, says your lay critic, is still in favour of the insurer. He would not expect the captain to risk his ship by careless stowage of cargo. Besides, what about the phrase "all other perils"? Doesn't that pin the underwriters down to their liability? Answers the professional: Not so. The term "all other perils" does not mean what to you it seems to say. In law it includes only perils similar in kind to the perils specifically mentioned in the policy. "Maritime perils," according to the Marine Insurance Act 1906 [6 Edw. 7, Ch. 41] means something different again. It means the perils consequent on, or incidental to, the navigation of the sea, that is to say, perils of the seas, fire, war perils, pirates, rovers, thieves, captures, seizures, restraints, and detentions of princes and peoples, jettisons, barratry, and any other perils, either of the like kind or which may be designated by the policy. Careless stowage does not amount to barratry, and it cannot come under the heading of knowledge which the assured could have and conceal from the insurer. Whether it affects the implied warranty that the vessel shall be seaworthy is a question the lay mind should be shy to answer, though it would seem not. The assured makes no warranty to the underwriters that the master and crew shall do their duty during the voyage, and their negligence or misconduct is no defence to an action on the policy, so that the Japanese decision against the China Traders' Insurance Co. Ltd. seems to have squared also with the English law as epitomized by DUCKWORTH. "This principle," according to PARKER, B. in DIXON v. SADLER, 5 M. & W. 414, "prevents many nice and difficult inquiries, and causes a more complete indemnity to the assured, which is the object of the contract of insurance," as the layman naturally assumes, the object of the insurer being to get the premium, if possible, for nothing. Each side trying to protect itself in every possible way has been equally responsible, no doubt, for the verbose and complicated form of the policy, the "true performance of the premises" in which could in all probability be secured with a much shorter and simpler form than that commonly used. The effectively reformed form, however, if it is ever adopted, will not be the work of laymen; and perhaps it will be unreasonable to expect the profession to draft a form affording fewer opportunities for expert definitions.

Another fatal case of bubonic plague was reported from Eastern Street on Saturday. The Colony's liabilities on September 30th amounted to $211,708.72. Its assets for the same period totalled $1,715,293.39. The balance of assets over liabilities is therefore $1,503,584.67. Receipts into the Treasury between January 1st and September 30th totalled $9,789,080.03 while the payments out for the same period were $9,817,703.50. Payments therefore exceed receipts by $34,623.47. A trailer was seen in the streets of Hongkong on Saturday for the first time. It was introduced by Mr. G. Hunter, of Messrs. Jardine, Matheson & Co., and attracted considerable attention. It is notified in the Gazette that Sir Matthew Nathan having resigned the appointment, His Excellency the Governor has been pleased to accept the position of hon. Colonel of the Hongkong Volunteer Corps. It is notified in the Gazette, with reference to Government notification No. 766 of 1907, that the existing legislation under which the importation into the Colony of bounty-free sugar is prohibited, will not be affected by the additional act of the Brussels Convention. His Excellency the Governor has given his assent, in the name and on behalf of His Majesty the King, to the following Ordinance passed by the Legislative Council: Ordinance No. 18 of 1907—An Ordinance to authorize Companies registered under the Companies Ordinance, 1865, to keep local registers of their members outside the Colony.

His Honour the Chief Justice (Sir Francis Piggott) returned to the Colony yesterday, looking very much the better for his holiday in the North.

At the Theatre Royal on Saturday night the Cinematograph Co. produced the Passion Play. There was a large attendance, and they manifested their approval of the performance in no unstated manner.

Readers are reminded of the Sale of Work in aid of the Organ Fund of the Union Church to be held to-morrow at the Volunteer Headquarters and Parade Ground. The advertisement, to which we refer the reader for fuller particulars, promises more than the usual attractions. The Japanese national costume dances by Japanese ladies, with characteristic musical accompaniment, is certain to prove a most interesting feature.

On Saturday, after a service of 30 years, Mr. G. de Champeaux relinquished the post of manager of the Messageries Maritimes Co. in Hongkong, as he is about to retire to his native land, France. Mr. de Champeaux is a well-known and popular resident, and leaves a host of friends behind him. On Saturday the staff of the Messageries Maritimes presented their late chief with a handsome silver flower-bowl in an ebony stand. Mr. J. Millet assumes charge of the agency from this date.

The Government have taken one step more to prohibit a popular vice. A regulation published in the current Gazette states that the importation into Hongkong through the Post Office of any lottery ticket or advertisement of any lottery or of any letter, post card or circular concerning any lottery is hereby prohibited. The Postmaster General may seize all such lottery tickets and letters, post cards or circulars concerning a lottery, and cause the same to be returned to the Post Office at which they were mailed.

The San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, in compliance with an application of Mr. H. B. Hulbert (formerly of Seoul), has adopted a resolution to put questions to the U.S. Government—through the representatives of California during the coming session of Congress—on the relation of the Japanese Sashimono and the existing Treaty between the United States and Korea. Mr. Hulbert maintains that American goods are now admitted into Korea on payment of 7 per cent. duty, according to the American-Korean Treaty. Japan is about to create a Customs union between Japan and Korea, Mr. Hulbert asserts, and in that case American goods will have to pay a duty 40 or 50 per cent. more. The Japanese have been rapidly purchasing land in Korea, with a view to raising cotton and wheat, and supplementing American cotton and flour from Korea.

DEATH OF MRS. MITCHELL TAYLOR.

The emotions of the Colony were profoundly stirred yesterday by the startling intelligence of the death, at Government House, of Mrs. Mitchell-Taylor, who but two months ago became the wife of Captain Mitchell-Taylor, A.D.C. to His Excellency the Governor. Mrs. Taylor had not been well since her return to the Colony after the honeymoon and was first under the treatment of Dr. Jordan for dengue fever and subsequently for a septo wound on the chin which healed up satisfactorily, but thirty-six hours before death occurred it became apparent that there was septic infection of the veins of the brain, and this was the cause of death, which occurred at 9.30 yesterday morning.

During her brief residence in the Colony Mrs. Taylor had made a host of friends who have been profoundly shocked by the tragic suddenness of her death. It is scarcely necessary to remark that the deepest sympathy is felt by everyone for the husband so suddenly bereaved as well as for Mr. A. J. Brackenbury, the deceased lady's brother (who is Private Secretary to His Excellency the Governor), and also for His Excellency and Lady Lugard who have lost a niece for whom they had the deepest affection.

The funeral takes place at Happy Valley this morning leaving Government House at 8 a.m. The cortege will pass the Monument about 8.45 a.m. For the convenience of Peak residents who wish to attend the funeral, we may add that there will be two special electric tram cars to meet the 8.15 tram from the Peak to convey passengers to the Monument.

All social engagements by Lady Lugard are in consequence of this sad event indefinitely postponed.

The flag at Government House was half-masted yesterday.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

At two o'clock on Saturday afternoon the Volunteers embarked at Pedder's Wharf for Stonecutters to obtain a little practice in gun laying. There was but a small number, due, no doubt, to the fact that St. Andrew's hall was held on the previous evening. After landing practice took place with the 15 pounders from an eminence on the north west slope of the island, the target being erected at Changhe. Considerable time was lost in making a start owing to junks and sampans getting in the way of the ranges, but eventually these were got out of the way and firing began. After about thirty practice, indirect laying was tried, but gunners were not very successful in the latter exercise, and at the end of the series the instructor, Lieut. Cross of the R.G.A., addressed the men. He pointed out that there was a lack of discipline on the gun, and on one occasion the No. 1 gave the wrong order. Then the No. 4 on another gun was responsible for bad laying through not getting the alignment posts in order. When the address had concluded the Volunteers embarked for Hongkong.

EVOLUTION OF HONGKONG.

[Written for the Hongkong Daily Press.]

X.

It was under such apparently alienist conditions that the war of 1842 was conducted, and that Great Britain as the result of its successful termination threw open the entire of the China trade to the world, taking no preference to herself, and giving the benefit of her new Colony of Hongkong freely and without any reserve whatever to all comers, of what nationality or colour whatsoever. Free-Trade had come to the birth, and the British Government of the day had determined that its natal day should be celebrated by becoming honour. That for many years Great Britain did enjoy by far the largest share of newly opened trade is not to be denied, nor that by encouraging the Oriental trade of the continental nations, who gave an enormous extension to her own home trade. Although it was not till 1846 that Sir Robert Peel announced finally his conversion to free trade, he had long accepted the principle, and the war, and subsequent peace were made under a cabinet of which Sir Robert Peel was chief, and Sir James Graham Home Secretary.

It was the hope of these early pioneers that seeing the benefits undeniably due to the removal of disabilities from trade other countries would as cordially join hands with the British financial reformers in reducing the duties which hampered commerce. A tendency was indeed noticeable in this direction for some years, but its inspiring motive was to take advantage to the fullest of the British concessions, accompanied indeed with hints thrown out of eventually following in the same line: finding as time passed by, and free trade became amongst inferior home politicians a fetish to be worshipped, instead of a means to an end, the continental rule became one of increasing exclusion of British made products, while at the same time taking advantage to the uttermost of British free trade.

It would, notwithstanding have been well for all had these openly announced intentions been acted on with regard to the new colony; they unfortunately were not. Sir Henry Pottinger, who had proved so able a representative of the British Government as Plenipotentiary for the negotiation of the treaty of Nanking, was appointed first Governor of the new possession, but proved himself totally unfit for administration; by foolish concessions to the Canton mandarins, who had now, finding they could do so with impunity returned to their old practices, he permitted regulations to be made, under his own signature, which practically placed the trade of Hongkong, in the hands of the Canton clique as effectually as had been the trade with the old factories. No independent trade was possible in the Free-Trade Colony, which became a second Lintin, and a refuge for all the offshoots of the China trade. Piracy became rampant in the adjoining seas, secretly favoured by the Canton authorities, and neither life nor property were safe on shore nor afloat. Respectable Chinese traders, who had commenced to settle in the colony under the promised protection of the British flag, finding that protection a delusion and a snare, cleared out, and Hongkong became a second Alsace. Nor were the government officials at the period above suspicion any many unsavoury tales of the colonial doings of the day still linger in the memories of the few survivors or are repeated by their immediate successors. When Sir J. F. Davis, in May 1844, again appeared in his old quarters, but this time as Governor of Hongkong to relieve Sir Henry Pottinger, not a soul was left to present the customary parting address, nor wish him God-speed.

The position of the governor of Hongkong at this period was decidedly anomalous: besides being Governor of the Colony under the Colonial Office, he was superintendent of trade for the entire of China then open under the Foreign Office. The instructions of the two not seldom clashed, and in endeavouring to do the best for trade generally the interests of the Colony as such not infrequently suffered. At all events between the two, the bright visions held out of the importance of Hongkong as a central point whether the trade of the entire coast of China would of necessity converge, were apparently doomed to bitter disappointment; and Hongkong itself began to ponder, as the time for restoring Chusan drew nigh, whether it were not itself a bitter mistake, and whether it should not better have been at Chusan.

Under Sir J. Davis, who united in his own person all the prejudices and weaknesses natural to a former member of the "Select Committee" under the East India Company, things did not improve either in Hongkong, nor at the neighbouring port of Canton, where up to this all foreign trade had been centred. We must, however, leave the South for a little while, and glance at the state of affairs at the newly opened ports to the northward.

In 1847 we find the Times newspaper commenting on the state of trade in China giving utterance to the remark, that Amoy, Foochow, and Ningpo were good for nothing as places of trade, while Hongkong as a commercial colony was equally worthless. As a matter of fact notwithstanding that the Chinese are amongst the most commercial of nations, the whole apparatus of foreign trade, including demand on both sides, and machinery, had to be created from the foundation. The initial slow progress of trade was, even if unhampered, only a thing to be anticipated; but it was in every way hampered by the prejudices of the ruling classes, and it was only through the unintermittent efforts of a few of the more energetic of the British officials on the spot, often against the inertia of the home authorities, that the unwieldy mass at last commenced to move.

The one exception to the general stagnation was Shanghai; and Shanghai had been fortunate in the men to whom were entrusted the keeping of British interests, Captain Balfour, and his successor Sir Rutherford Alcock, both men with whom to a generous sympathy with Chinese weaknesses and old time traditions, was superadded a quiet determination to see their rights respected.

It was unfortunate that the same could not be recorded of Canton, with which the native population of Hongkong was at all times very much in sympathy. The Canton authorities had so often in their previous contests with the East India Company called in the assistance of the mob to enforce their claims that the latter came to look upon itself as the real arbiter in all foreign matters, and neither Kiating the new Commissioner, nor the Viceroy cared to incur the odium of opposing it, looked up as it undoubtedly was by the whole body of the inferior officials. Sir Henry Pottinger, and after him Sir J. Davis, notwithstanding that they had adequate force at their disposal at Amoy and Chusan, as well as in the naval and military garrisons at Hongkong, weakly permitted themselves to be talked over by the new Commissioner, who pleaded his inability to control the people, and the consequence was their yielding under mob menace the right of freely entering the city, which was one of the main stipulations of the Treaty. On the other hand in the face of this open breach of the stipulations of the Treaty, Sir J. Davis when the time came concurred without protest of any kind in the withdrawal of the troops from Amoy and Chusan, an act which Sir J. Davis himself afterwards testifies produced a change for the worse in the tone of the Chinese authorities; even Kiating forgetting his urbanity, and acting with a "degree of brusquerie, not to say insolence never before exhibited by him." The old days of the Company were being re-animated, and we find the Minister, instead of asking for troops to assist him in checking the outrages again becoming of constant occurrence, seeking for greater power to coerce his own nationals.

This was the more noteworthy that we find the Home Government, Lord Palmerston being Foreign Minister at the period, instructing Sir J. Davis to impress on the Chinese authorities "in plain and distinct terms that the British Government will not tolerate a Chinese mob shall with impunity maltreat British subjects in China . . . and that if the Chinese authorities will not by the exercise of their own power punish and prevent such outrages, the British Government will be obliged to take the matter into their own hands." Notwithstanding these outspoken words of the Home Minister, we find shortly afterwards on the mere statement by Kiating that the "feelings of the people of Canton were not yet reconciled to it," Sir J. Davis actually postponing for two years the right of entering the City or visiting the authorities!

EYES AND VISION—ELECTRICAL COLOR-MAKING—AN X-RAY REFLECTION—THE SHEEP DESTROYING PARROT—LUMINOUS ROCKS—THE AUTO AS A TONIC—SPARKS FROM RUBBER—POURING—THE PRUTIC BLOOD-MATING—JAPAN'S BIST.

Eyes differ, and naturalists have only a very imperfect understanding of what the various animals can see, but from late experiments Leon J. Cole, a Harvard zoologist finds that insects and reptiles may be divided by the acuteness of their vision into four types. The first, of which the earthworm is a representative, is without eyes, a sensitive skin enabling it to distinguish between darkness and light. A second type has visual organs, but they form no definite images and are affected only by the intensity and direction of the light. Creatures of the third type have eyes that distinguish between equally lighted objects of different sizes. In the fourth type, the eyes perceive objects, and vision is much like our own. Just what is the use of the many small images formed by the compound eyes of insects is still uncertain.

Electro-chemistry is in its infancy, but its products already include mineral and artificial organic colors that promise to become serious competitors of the coal-tar dyes. The new coloring matters are precipitated by the electric current from suitable solutions. In this way Scheele's green, Berlin green, vermillion, Japanese red, cherry red, cadmium yellow, zinc white and certain organic colors are now obtained on a commercial scale, and the list will doubtless be rapidly extended.

A curious mirage reported by Dr. C. G. Knott was seen in South Africa by members of a cadet corps. With the town of Worcester behind them, they saw about four miles off, apparently on the other side of the river, a recognizable image of the town itself.

A strange phenomenon in a land of strange natural history is the recent transformation of one of New Zealand's harmless insect-eating birds into a fierce and cruel bird of prey. Less than forty years ago a number of curiously torn sheep were brought to the notice of some farmers, and about the carcasses were seen several specimens of the kea, a mountain parrot found only in the South Island, where it fed on insects and berries. Convinced on this feeble circumstantial evidence, the kea has been regarded as the slayer of thousands of sheep that have been since destroyed. To give the accused bird a fair trial and settle an important scientific question, Prof. G. R. Marshall, of Canterbury College, has been lately seeking more conclusive evidence than that recorded, and has succeeded in fading over thirty men who have witnessed the killing. One or two of the keas usually attack a selected sheep with their strong beaks, while others look on and come in for a share of the spoil. Dr. A. R. Wallace and others have asserted that the kea is sought as a special delicacy, but it appears instead that the handiest portion of the flesh is torn out and eaten. Prof. Marshall favours the theory that the birds acquired a taste for meat while hunting miggos on dead sheep.

Chain lightning and other luminous phenomena near earthquakes have been attributed to friction of the rocks. Noticing that a chalk pit near his house seemed to glow at times with a varying light, Prof. John Milne has exposed strips of photographic paper moved by clockwork near the rock in the Isle of Wight and in Cornwall and development has shown curious spots, bands and other markings, with intervals of many days with no record. These dark patches cannot be imitated by electric discharges.

The physical effects of several days of auto-mobiling upon both normal and anemic persons are found by A. Mooneyrate to be those of a day in the mountains—red blood being increased, with stimulation of respiration, circulation and nervous system.

Several other explosions that occurred in chemical works in 1906 have been investigated by Dr. M. Richter, and it is shown that the evaporation of very volatile liquids may charge objects in contact with electricity and give rise to sparks. In a few instances, men holding a funnel through which ether was being poured have received shocks and even been killed. Wool agitated with light ether became positively charged with a potential as high as 2,000 volts, but the charge was much slighter with heavier ether. Evaporation of carbon bisulphide may give a charge up to 13,000 volts, making it surprising that this substance is not often ignited spontaneously by sparks. Addition of some impurity may lessen risk in some cases, and one-hundredth of one per cent of magnesium oleate prevents danger of the electrical sparking of benzene. It is recommended that in handling these liquids all metallic vessels, retorts and pipes have good earth connection and glass or earthenware funnels be used instead of metal.

The Vienna Serum Institute is not only investigating the effect of blood serum cultures in various diseases, but last year supplied medical men with 75,000 bottles of anti-diphtheria serum, 7,500 doses of anti-scarlatina serum, and 2,000 doses of anti-dysentery serum. In preparing the serum, the quantity of blood taken from each animal is eleven pints each time. This is repeated ten times a year, and each animal kept for the purpose therefore contributes 55 quarts of blood annually.

Japanese lacquer, an Oriental product that remains unvarnished, is made of the gum of Rhus vernicifera, cultivated in both China and Japan, and grown elsewhere as an ornamental tree. The lacquer is remarkable for its brilliant green, endurance and toughness, and its resistance to acids, alcohol and boiling water.

The Allenburys' Foods.
The Allenburys' Milk Foods are the nearest approach to maternal milk that science has yet achieved. They provide, when used as directed, a complete diet for infants; promote vigorous health and growth; make firm flesh and strong bones; and are so graduated as to give the maximum quantity of nourishment the child is capable of digesting, according to age. Diarrhoea, digestive and stomach troubles are avoided when these foods are given, as by the method of manufacture, they are absolutely devoid of noxious germs, and therefore safer than, and superior to, cow's milk, especially in hot weather. The Milk Foods are made instantly by the simple addition of hot water only, and are alike suitable for the delicate infant and the child in robust health.
